Concluſion of CURSORY REMARKS on a Pamphlet, intituled, BRITAIN'S Miſtakes in the Commencement and Conduct of the Preſent War.

IN order to leſſen the Meaſures purſued by the Adminiſtration, this clear-ſighted Writer [p. 21, 22.] flies to the Days of Queen Elizabeth; and, notwithſtanding what has been lately ſaid in Proof of England's bearing then more Inſults and Oppreſſion than have occaſion'd the preſent War, he aſſerts that Princeſs's Preparations againſt Spain were carried on with ſuch Secrecy as to be unſuſpected, till her Deſigns and Declaration of War were at once made known:——But whatever Succeſs attended that Princeſs's Arms in America, it ought to be remembered that ſhe was known to be no farther engaged againſt Spain, than by an Agreement to ſupply the United Provinces with Five Thouſand Foot and One Thouſand Horſe, againſt the Tyranny of their Spaniſh Sovereign. Whence (whatever Uſe was made of it) ſhe had a better Opportunity to deceive a Court with which ſhe was at no open Variance, than if, during a long Courſe of Years, ſhe had been in an almoſt continul Miſunderſtanding, and Oppoſition of Intereſts,—— And yet, under the latter Circumſtances, the Notice obtained by the Court of Spain relating to the Intention of ſending the Squadron at preſent in the Weſt-Indies, has produced nothing dangerous to our Intereſts, or derogatory from the Wiſdom of our Publick Councils.——Had the Malecontents of Queen Elizabeth's Days been indulged the Liberty thoſe of the preſent Time enjoy, what an Opportunity would they have had to complain, that a War commenced ſolely in Defence of Others was unneceſſary?——As we have heard little leſs aſſerted of the preſent War, tho' entered upon only with a View of defending the Honour of the Britiſh Crown, and the Free Commerce of its Subjects.

The Encomium [p. 22.] upon Queen Elizabeth's Miniſters, for diſcovering that France and Spain were united, is but a poor Occaſion for ſneering at the preſent Time, for that Union was known to all Europe long before the Engliſh Preparations, being indeed what render'd the Aſſiſtance of England neceſſary.

Oliver Cromwell is next extoll'd, [p. 24.] and this Commendation is the more extraordinary (however faſhionable) for being confeſſedly beſtowed upon an Expedition that ſucceeded contrary to his Intentions.

To this ſucceeds (almoſt verbatim, from near a Dozen late Pamphlets, &c.) a General and Particular Proteſt againſt the late Treaties; thoſe of Hanover, Seville, and Vienna, are condemned without Mercy, by this penetrating Politician, who would have had us join with the Courts of Vienna and Madrid, in 1725. rather than preſerve a Balance of Power by the Treaty of Hanover.

The Government is blamed [p. 26, 27.] for not ſending Troops againſt France in 1733;—— and ſo entirely has this Merchant again forgotten Trade, that (though he cannot deny that our engaging againſt France and Spain, while the Dutch preſerved a Neutrality, would have proved fatal to our Traffick) he ridiculouſly ſays, 'Surely we are not in all Caſes to 'meaſure our Conduct by that of the Dutch;' urging a very uncommon Reaſon why we ſhould have been better without than with Allies; viz. 'That then we 'might do as we would, without any Body to controul 'us!'

Agreeably with the Labours of his Brethren who have preceded him, this honeſt Engliſhman makes no Difficulty at entering on an open Defence of the Spaniſh Conduct; and complains [p. 29.] that every Ship ſeized by Spain was not reſtored within Six Months, ſpite of every Obſtacle, that may, in Caſes of that Nature, unavoidably multiply Delays;—whereby all Complaints on our Side againſt unjuſt Seizures are ſuppoſed well grounded; tho' he muſt ſurely be too partial to his Country, who can believe all its Sons incapable of being biaſſed by Private Intereſt, to Demands that cannot, always, be ſufficiently ſupported: For, notwithſtanding this Gentleman's inſiſting upon a Peremptory Demand of what Ships were UNJUSTLY ſeized, that Expreſſion is as liable to Exception on one Side as the other; and (whatever he may ſtrive to make of the Phraſe) other than CONDITIONAL Orders can never be given where there is a Poſſibility of Violence or Injuſtice.——So that this Writer, when he thanks God [p. 30.] for not being acquainted with Secrets of State, has equal Reaſon to be thankful for a Capacity that will not much endanger his being burthened with them.

As it was judg'd neceſſary to draw Troops from Ireland, this Writer inſiſts that we ought rather to have ſent ſome thither; and becauſe an Honourable Gentleman was employ'd on an Embaſſy, he ſhamefully blames him for taking his Lady and Family with him.

Next to this, Admiral Vernon's Inſtructions are condemn'd, then his Delay, and afterwards the Winds that prevented his falling in with the Aſſogue Ships.

This very trifling and coarſe Writer employs himſelf [p. 32, &c.] in talking of Admiral Haddock's ſhewing his Teeth; of the Proclamation for Repriſals being publiſhed a Month too ſoon; in owning that tho' the Government was ſo far right as to diſpatch to America Orders for Repriſals a Month before they were publiſhed here, that yet it was not ſoon enough by a full Month: And Commodore Browne is blam'd for Sailing [p. 36.] againſt the Spaniſh Settlements, becauſe they would be thereby let to know we were not their Friends, which, according to this Writer, was to remain an inviolable Secret.

Our Author yet farther diſplays his Judgment [p. 36.] by inſinuating the Deſign of our Commodore was to prevent the Spaniards from being injured, and aſſuring us, that he very wiſely expects to hear no better Account of our Exploits on Land, than at Sea, becauſe, ſays he, 'we have ſent no Regular Troops, 'nor any Sort of Force proper for making a vigorous 'and ſucceſsful Deſcent; therefore, barring a few 'INSIGNIFICANT INCURSIONS, I expect to 'hear of nothing but another Baſtimento's Expedition; 'and ſurely we do not intend to keep a Squadron 'HOVERING before the Havanna, or PORTO 'BELLO as long as the War may laſt between Us 'and Spain, &c.—To this let the Names of VERNON and PORTO BELLO reply.

After this, in vain may he hope to gain the Attention of his Readers, by again complaining, that we have too many large, and too few ſmall Ships in the Service, and that even thoſe in Commiſſion are not properly diſpoſ'd of.— 'Tis evident, that the Meaſures this little Dictator would recommend, as they differ from thoſe hitherto purſu'd, are inferior to them; and therefore to his long and perplex'd Labour of no leſs than twenty-three Pages, to prove the Importance of his Advice, and the Neceſſity of our following his Directions, it need only be reply'd, that the little Chimeras of a bewilder'd Fancy may pleaſe itſelf, but by the Governors of a People only Publick Utility ought to be regarded.

Our Author very honeſtly declares [p. 57.] the Occaſion of his Writing—— 'If a Change of Pilots 'was neceſſary at the Beginning of the War, it is now 'more neceſſary than it was at firſt.—— If we had 'got Poſſeſſion of ſome of the chief Spaniſh Settlements in America, before the French could have 'come to their Aſſiſtance, we might have carried on 'the War, for ſeveral Years, againſt both, with Succeſs, we might have concluded it with Honour!'——Here we ſee what Haſte theſe Writers are in to find fault, and how incapable of gueſſing Events from Appearances.—— Whence we may judge, what a Nation might expect under ſuch Directors!

For this Change of Miniſtry, leſt other Methods ſhould be found ineffectual, the P————t is modeſtly inſtructed to petition, in 'Hopes they will [p. '61.] take the preſent dangerous Situation of their 'Country into their moſt ſerious Conſideration.' After this he adds, 'If any thing I have ſaid can con'tribute in the leaſt towards MAKING THEM re'ſolve to do ſo, I ſhall think I have done my Coun'try a real Service; becauſe I am convinc'd they 'will then give their Sovereign that Advice which, 'in their great Wiſdom, they may think beſt, for 'eſchewing the DANGER we are now expos'd to.'

When the Reader has compar'd this with the preſent known State of our Publick Affairs abroad and at home, the Folly, Malice, and Inſolence, of this pretended Well-wiſher to his Country, will ſufficiently appear; and it may now reaſonably be hop'd, this Performance will be the laſt of the Kind the Publick will be peſter'd with, from a Party ſo defeated in its Hopes, ſo diſappointed in its Wiſhes:— For if they are not aſham'd of the injudicious and unſeaſonable Piece before me, at what will they bluſh!

Temple, March 22. ALG. SIDNEY.

Yeſterday arriv'd a Mail from Holland.

Peterſbourg, March 11. N. S.

THE Czarina has not only made ſeveral Promotions of her Officers, but has regal'd them with many Preſents, beſides thoſe formerly mention'd to the Velt-Marſhals de Munich and Laſcy. The Court has ſent Orders to the Governor of Aſoph for demoliſhing that Fortreſs, purſuant to the Treaty with the Porte. The Negociation commenc'd with England will not be reſum'd till Mr. Finch arrives here: The Secretary of the Britiſh Embaſſy is furniſhing the Palace he has hir'd for Mr. Finch, who is expected here by the Beginning of May, in Quality of his Britannick Majeſty's Envoy Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; and we are aſſur'd that he will bring with him the Ratification of the Treaty of Alliance ſaid to be concluded betwixt our Court and that of Great Britain.

Bruſſels, March 28. N. S. We hear that the Prince and Biſhop of Liege has laid a Tax of Cent. per Cent. on all the Commodities of the Growth of the Auſtrian Netherlands that ſhall be imported into that Country; which 'tis ſaid is by way of Reprizal for an additional Tax of two Florins which the Regency has thought fit to lay upon the Coals that are imported from the Biſhoprick of Liege. This Affair makes a great Noiſe. All the Officers of the Walloon Regiment of Guards that remain'd here in the King of Spain's Service are ſet out for Barcelona, to go on board there with four Battallions of the ſame Regiment for the Iſle of Majorca. Some Letters from Madrid ſay, that the late Duke of Ormond is arriv'd there from Barcelona.
